Pride of Prairie

The Midlands can be proud of one of its daughters. Arleen Liska of Niobrara appeared on the "Tell the Truth" television program yesterday and conducted herself like the fine example of Cornhusker femininity that she is.

Arleen accompanied her husband, Danny, on a motorcycle tour from the top of Norway to the tip of Africa.

Arleen's demure appearance fooled the panel. Only one of the four members picked her. Those who voted against her found it hard to believe that her husky rancher husband, charming Arleen and a tent could travel together on a motorbike through Darkest Africa, as she told the panel they did.

If the panelists had delved a bit more into her background they would have seen how very credible the trip could be for the attractive Niobraran. She often has run the ranch alone when Danny has been gone on other trips. She can take care of the cattle and the many chores necessary where livestock is involved.

She is proof that the spirit of the pioneer women still lives in Nebraska. I'm sure the panel and the television audience caught some of that spirit.
